The Life of Frederick Douglass

The life of Frederick Douglass was a very exhilarating and emotional story. When Douglass was sold to Hugh Auld he was taught how to read by Auld's wife. Some years later Douglass escaped slavery and became an abolitionist. Frederick Douglass began giving speeches at abolitionist meetings. He was very brave, wise, and an outstanding person.

Frederick Douglass was a brave man. He once escaped slavery by disguising himself as a sailor. He used every opportunity to continue teaching himself to read. He gave lectures about freedom and slavery at abolitionist group meetings. I don't think that I would have had enough courage to do what Frederick Douglass did to become a freed slave.

Douglass was a very wise person. After learning to read he escaped slavery. He became very smart and changed his identity so that he wouldn't be caught. Douglass was a very unique person because he stood up for the rights of slaves. I wish I were as smart as Frederick Douglass.

Frederick Douglass was an outstanding person. He gave lectures at abolitionist meetings. He became a journalist and published his autobiography. Douglass was a brilliant person who was a formal slave who became famous. Most of the time I wish I could be as remarkable as Frederick Douglass.

In conclusion, these are all very interesting facts about Frederick Douglass. He was very robust, enlightened, and marvelous person. If I had a magic mirror that would grant me a wish, it would be to become as smart and exhilarating as Frederick Douglass. If it weren't for Frederick Douglass, I don't think the world would be the same. I just wonder how people survived slavery with no Human Rights laws to protect them.
